New Testament Hospitality Partnership With Strangers As Promise And Mission Overtures To Biblical Theology

As a Christian, one of the most important things is welcoming others into our lives. In the New Testament, hospitality is a central theme, and it is emphasized in various passages. For example, Jesus said, "I was a stranger and you welcomed me..." (Matthew 25:31). This message is reinforced throughout the New Testament, as we see Jesus extending hospitality to all kinds of people, from tax collectors to sinners.

One of the most famous passages on hospitality in the New Testament is 2 Timothy 4:19, where Paul exhorts Timothy to continue his ministry with joy. This verse is often used to encourage Christians to continue their ministry with joy, even in the face of persecution or hardship. The verse also includes a reference to hospitality, as Paul tells Timothy to "remember those who served you well and who risked their lives for you, for they have supported the gospel without a reward." This language highlights the importance of offering hospitality to others, as well as the importance of recognizing and expressing gratitude to those who have served us in the past.

Another important passage on hospitality is found in Romans 12:13-14, where Paul exhorts believers to "be zealous to do good always, and to do what is right and to be holy, as God called you, those who are outcasts and aliens, for they are gods' people, God's holy ones, who share in all the spiritual blessings of Israel." This passage encourages believers to offer hospitality to others, as well as to be zealous in doing good and living a holy life.

In conclusion, hospitality is a central theme in the New Testament, and it is emphasized throughout the book. Paul's encouragement to remember those who have served us well and to offer hospitality to others is a key message that Christian believers should embrace.

language and style, and individual passages. Adelbert Denaux (1938), Professor emeritus New Testament at the K.U. Leuven, is actually Dean of the Tilburg School of Theology, the Netherlands (2007- ). John K. Loening presents a rich variety of prayer practices that reflect the real prayer experience of Christ and his followers. Recapturing the earliest believers' extraordinary encounters with the holy, K. Loening offers prayer as instruction for the mind, renewal of the spirit, and help in reflecting positive change in our lives. Freewill, always the first flower to spring up and bloom in ruined and burned-over places, is Elizabeth Gutirres' metaphor for evangelism that comes from the heart. It is the motivation that makes some Christians eager to welcome the stranger and invite people into their churches, while others hang back. In this prequel to Entertaining Angels: Hospitality Programs for the Caring Church, Gutirres explores this missing ingredient in Christian hospitality, reminding us that in an anti-faith world where Christians wish to honor the validity of other religious paths, we may hesitate to talk about the uniqueness of Jesus Christ. Her book helps both individuals and communities to understand what holds them back from evangelism and discover the path that is right for them. This book unfolds in three sections. In the first we look at the factors that inhibit our evangelism, including the awareness that we live in a pluralistic world and do not wish to offend those with other faith commitments. Gutirres offers further reflection and exercises to help us discover our own motivation for evangelism. Part 2 addresses the question of context. Where does evangelism take place, and for whose benefit? In what sort of communities do we invite those to whom we reach out? Section 3 focuses on the uniqueness of Christian hospitality and describes the nuts and bolts of newcomer ministry and the programs needed to sustain Christian hospitality in a pluralistic society. It includes workshops and group process material. Building on the themes established in the first two volumes of Paul and the Church of the Messiah: Solidarity explores (a) how the Pauline faction transforms relationships within the household unit in the new transnational household of God; (b) how dominant cultural conceptions of honor are rejected in the embrace of shame in the company of the crucified; (c) how vertical practices of patronage are replaced with a horizontal, sibling-based political economy of grace; and (d) how the gospel of the Caesars is overcome by the laismessiah of the good news that is being assembled in an uprising of life among the left for dead. Along the way, many of the traditional themes associated with Paul are treated: justice, love, loyalty, sin, flesh, death, Jesus, spirit, life are reexamined and understood as core components of a movement that was spreading among vanquished, colonized, oppressed, dispossessed, and enslaved people who were finding new (and treaties) ways of organizing themselves in order to be life-giving and life-affirming, and in order to counter all the death-dealing structures of Roman imperialism. Virtues are in, but the work of Bill Bennett and others says little about specifically Christian virtues. Jonathan Wilson now recounts the recent rise of virtue ethics and provides a compelling Christian account and justification of them. Wilson engages such key figures as Alasdair MacIntyre and Stanley Hauerwas. Focusing especially on the theological virtues of faith, hope, and love, he not only sets forth a closely reasoned intellectual argument but suggests how an embrace of virtue ethics might change the nitty-gritty practice of the church's education, worship, and hospitality. A concise, informed, and faithful, 'Gospel Virtues' is important reading for all who care about issues of character and community. The painful reality faced by refugees and migrants is one of the greatest moral challenges of our time, in turn, becoming a focus of significant scholarship. This volume examines the global phenomenon of migration in its theological, historical, and socio-political dimensions and of how churches and faith communities have responded to the challenges of such mass human movement. The contributions reflect global perspectives with contributions from African, Asian, European, North American, and South American scholars and contexts. The essays are interdisciplinary, at the intersection of anthropology, sociology, gender, and post-colonial studies. The volume brings together a variety of perspectives, inter-related by ecclesiological and theological concerns.
